

Notes about interview

Various approaches to holiday planning were observed, including collaboration and spontaneity.

Scheduling conflicts due to diverse commitments emerged as a common challenge.

Accommodation preferences ranged from flexible to specific preferences for comfort.

Attitudes towards planning varied, from laid-back to meticulous.

Instances of hesitancy and nonchalance were noted in some responses.

Limited discomfort with accommodation choices was reported across the interviews.

Conclusion

The interviews revealed diverse approaches to holiday planning, with scheduling challenges being a common concern. Accommodation preferences varied, and attitudes towards planning ranged from casual to more meticulous. While there were instances of hesitancy and nonchalance, overall discomfort with accommodation was limited. These insights highlight the need for flexible planning solutions to accommodate diverse preferences and schedules.

Crampted empathy map

